MESSAGE

The need to work within resource constraints while providing better services and coping with a rapidly changing economic order requires Government to effect positive change where they are most needed.

Executive Order No. 366 sets the direction and purpose for the change journey that Government is expected to follow. It is a move to transform the Executive Branch into a high-performing, results-oriented government from one that is saddled with bureaucratic overlaps and redundancies. It aims to focus government efforts on its vital/core functions and channel government resources to these core public services.

This guidebook provides the heads of agencies and the Change Management Teams with approaches, practical tools, and techniques to aid them in making a successful change journey, from initiating and planning the rationalization effort to implementing it in their respective agencies. In coming out with this manual, we recognize that the heart of change lies with the people in the organization. A good part of managing the change process therefore deals with the concerns of agency personnel: those who have been tasked to manage the change, as well as those who will be affected by the rationalization.

One thing is clear: there is no single, cookie-cutter approach to managing change; there are only valuable lessons to be learned from those who blazed the trail or continue with their journey unfazed by obstacles along the way.

I would like to thank all our partners in the Rationalization Program and those who provided technical assistance and support in making this guidebook possible. To all who wish to see government change for the better and contribute to making it better—this manual is for you.

Mabuhay and I look forward to seeing a truly energized public sector in the service of the Filipino!

ROLANDO G. ANDAYA, JR.
Secretary
Department of Budget and Management

MESSAGE

The seed for the Government's Rationalization Program was planted and nurtured by the Presidential Committee on Effective Governance (PCEG), which was tasked to oversee and coordinate institutional reforms in the bureaucracy. The PCEG was a multi-disciplinary committee representing various agencies of Government. Initially, the PCEG's review of structures, mandates, and functions of agencies and corporations was done piecemeal. It was during this review process that the idea to develop a comprehensive and sustainable strategy for a bureaucracy-wide reengineering was born.

The PCEG identified the administrative track as the available and more definite option for reform. This entailed strategic streamlining within existing statutes and presidential powers. Long before Executive Order No. 366 was issued, the PCEG had already drawn up its blueprint, providing, among others, a mechanism for agencies to manage their respective rationalization programs. After the Committee's disbandment, the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Budget and Management took on the task of completing the Rationalization Program.

This guidebook provides a theoretical framework for change management as well as insights drawn by the CSC and DBM from shepherding and/or handholding the rationalizing agencies. The experience has been rich and instructive. Indeed, any change in the bureaucracy is a Herculean process. The concerns that were brought to the Change Management Teams, the CSC, and DBM cover a whole range of issues, from organizational to sectoral, to very personal and individual problems that demanded the same amount of attention, time, and energy.

Difficult as government rationalization is, the outcomes of a better, more efficient, more effective, more purposive, and more robust bureaucracy far exceeds the price.
